

PRESS TEXT LILABUNGALLOW

A pleasant disappointment

Those who value fidelity to style and consistency will be pleasantly disappointed. LILABUNGALLOW is musical self-indulgence. Patrick Föllmer plays solo and at the centre of a trio of passionate musicians who roam around with LILABUNGALLOW, live in it and constantly expand it. Somewhere between sugary-sweet electropop, driving funk pearls and a demanding electric guitar, Föllmer performs lyrics about the great universals of life: men, women, live and let live.

Without ironic distancing, he asserts that this is what making music is all about for him: getting a stage for his conversations about life in general and in particular - and also explicitly. The possibility of being able to do almost anything as a musician on a stage without the audience being able to distinguish between what was improvised and what was planned visibly appeals to the frontman. Depending on the mood, interjections become a game with dialects, with the audience and with his own subpersonalities, which dutifully disappear again when the singer appears dressed and charming at the merchandise stand.
